A Practical Guide to Discovering Tomball Farmers Market

Tomball Farmers Market is scheduled for Saturday, November 7, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Here's how to plan a visit and use the market's vendor information to see who may be there.

A farmers market can make local shopping more personal: instead of choosing from an anonymous shelf, visitors can explore goods from growers, food producers and makers. Tomball Farmers Market offers that kind of marketplace, with a range of products and a practical way to check participating vendors before making the trip.

The market is scheduled for Saturday, November 7, 2026, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. at 205 W. Main St. in Old Town Tomball. The Greater Tomball Area Chamber lists admission as free. The market's visitor information places it between Cherry and Walnut streets, lists free parking and says leashed pets are welcome. Check the organizer's updates before heading out in case details change.

The organizer describes a year-round mix of farmers and vendors, including permanent and fill-in participants. Its listed product categories include produce, honey, meat, baked goods, prepared foods and handmade crafts. That variety can make a visit useful for more than one kind of errand: shoppers might be looking for ingredients, something ready to eat or a locally made gift. The sources reviewed do not confirm which vendors or products will be available on November 7, so treat those categories as a guide to what the market offers generally—not a promise about that Saturday.

A good first step is to open the market's weekly vendor map and current vendor information before visiting. The map can help shoppers see which businesses are listed for the week and plan what they want to look for. Because participation and product availability can vary, check it close to the date rather than relying on an older listing.

The market says vendors must grow, make or handcraft their products within 180 miles of Tomball, and that its committee reviews and approves vendors. It also says farmers receive an on-site farm visit before approval and every two years afterward. These are the organizer's stated standards; they don't establish the attendance or inventory of any particular business on a given day.

For a simple plan, arrive during the listed hours, use the vendor map to guide your browsing, and leave room for substitutions if a particular item or seller isn't there. The Chamber's event listing and the market's visitor page are the best places to confirm practical details; the market's vendor page and weekly map can help set expectations for the offerings.
